

HAVE THE BANKS FORMED MERGER?

San Francisco, April 29.—It is said here today that the issue raised by the attempted merger of the Union State Bank and the National Bank of the Pacific will be referred to the comptroller of the currency for settlement. The Union State Bank is alleged to have gained control of the National Pacific by quietly purchasing small blocks of stock, and to have planned to consolidate the two institutions.

"If any other bank had gained control of the stock of our bank, we do not know it," said Eldridge. "The management of this bank will not consent to a consolidation of any kind." Cashier William Hayes, of the Union State Bank, says that his bank has taken over control of the Pacific Bank, and that will be the end of the question. The Union State Bank is one of the smaller financial institutions of the city, and this fact has given rise to a generally expressed opinion that it is acting for larger interests. This is denied emphatically by officers of the bank. That the officers and directors of the National Bank of the Pacific are determined in their intention to maintain a separate existence was affirmed by Eldridge today. "We absolutely will not be a party to any such arrangements," he said. "Before it could be accomplished, the consent of the comptroller of the currency would have to be obtained, and this, I know, has not been done." The former directors of the State Savings and Commercial Bank, recently consolidated with the Union State, have gone into court with a claim that they were ousted illegally from the directorate, and the litigation promises to develop into a three-cornered fight.
